

SISTA ZOCK

Step into the liminal space where the echoes of Nina Simone, John Coltrane, and Billie Holiday converge with an Afro-Futuristic lyrical vibe. Sista Zock, a Renaissance Woman from Harlem, crafts a sonic experience that transcends boundaries.

In a testament to her artistic prowess, Sista Zock's track "You Should Know That" resonates as the official trailer for Academy Award-winning Lee's Netflix series, "She's Gotta Have It Season 2—a testament to its captivating allure.

Navigating the delicate balance between spoken word and song, Sista Zock introduces a unique Afro Jazz Fusion Sound with a touch of Hip-hop. Her latest project, "Zock Solid, Where the Stem Meets the Root," features a collaboration with Abiodun of The Last Poets, adding depth and resonance to her musical journey.

Dedicated to fallen soldiers, victims of senseless killings, and those ahead of their time, this work speaks to the soul with poignant sincerity. In her own words, Sista Zock unveils the life of a "Black Girl" in America. The songs encapsulate journal entries, tributes, expressions of expectation, and pathways out of despair.

Beyond the music, Sista Zock's story is one of triumph, optimism, and unwavering perseverance. Her performances are a seamless fusion of her myriad talents, a captivating showcase of artistic versatility.

Having graced the stage with luminaries such as Omari Hardwick, Loretta Divine, Bilal, Macy Gray, and more, Sista Zock's musical collaborations extend to Abiodun of The Last Poets, Dennis Davis, Chip Crawford, and Lakecia Benjamin. The impact of her artistry transcends boundaries, as The Mount Vernon Enquirer-Joe Peressi noted, that Sista Zock "has the ability to inspire individuals from all different backgrounds."

In every note, in every lyric, Sista Zock weaves a narrative that goes beyond music—a testament to resilience, cultural richness, and the indomitable spirit of a true artist.
